STATIONED TROOPS AT SALOON

National and State Authorities Clash at Fort Myer.

Washington, Nov. 12.—So frequent has been serious trouble between soldiers stationed at Fort Myer, Va., just outside Washington, and the habitues of three sa-loons near the post that Colonel W. M. Wallace, commanding the Fifteenth Uni-ted States Cavalry, recently stationed a guard near these bars, with orders to pre-vent soldiers from entering them. This has caused a row between Colonel Wal-lace and Crandal Mackay, attorney for the Commonwealth of Viriginia. Colonel Wallace also issued a circular order forblddding the men of his command from entering these saloons. Mr. Mackay has addressed Colonel Wallace officially, stating that while he appreciates his high mo-tive, the authorities of the county are ready and willing to preserve order.

Mr. Mackay further states that the saloonkeepers are taxpayers, and that they protest that Colonel Wallace's guard prevents the men who owe them money for loans, cigars and drinks from coming in to pay up. As a result, Colonel Wallace has withdrawn the guard, but simply on the ground that it was no longer needed. Inasmuch as this question is one presented at many army posts, the War Department is not inclined readily to recognize the right of State authorities to interfere with the steps taken by a post commander to keep his men from getting lets.

ROBS CHEWING GUM MACHINE.

Liberality in "Treating" His Friends Gets Him Into Jail and Repentance Follows Swiftly.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Temple, Tex., Nov. 12.-A strange tale, having to do with the telephone, a bad boy and the theft of a gum-vending machine by the aforesaid bad boy, came to light here a few days since by the arrest of the boy.

During a fire that occurred several weeks ago a gum-vending machine was stolen from in front of a local drug store. Having just loaded the silent salesman up with $30 worth of gum, the druggist, on ascertaining his loss, did not take very kindly to his bad luck and naturally notifled the police, who received instructions from their Chief to keep a sharp look out for the boy or man who had plenty of chewing gum to distribute among his

LIBERALITY BETRAYS HIM. Liberality in treating is what led to the culprit's downfall, for it was but a short time until the officers were informed that Harry Price, a noted bad boy of the town, had more gum than his pockets could hold and was dispensing same with reckless prodigality among his followers. It took but a few minutes to run Harry to earth and not much longer than that to make a full confession. In fact, he got sorry so fast for his misdeed that he offered to pay for all the gum. This the druggist would for all the gum. This the druggist would not listen to, but insisted upon his pound of flesh, prosecution in this case for the lad needed a little durance vile to purge him of other misadventures.

When the last ray of hope was gone young Price became sorry still faster and announced his intention of pleading guilty by telephone, Belton, the county seat, where presides the Judge of the County Court, being eight miles away. So it was arranged that in order to expedite matters and accelerate his confinement that a telephone plea would be accepted.

TRIAL BY TELEPHONE TRIAL BY TELEPHONE.

The Judge accordingly took up his receiver at the Belton end of the line and accepted the plea of guilty, then, by the same medium of communication he wafted back the penalty, thirty days in jall and $55 fine. Ringing off on the Temple line he called up the Sheriff's office to notify him that the commitment papers were him that the commitment papers were ready.

The latter official, in his turn, rang up the superintendent of the County Farm and instructed him to get ready to receive a new boarder. That official was at a distant point on the farm when he got the message through a local phone, which he used to ring up the farm and order his assistant to prepare for the lodger. That worthy replied that he would, and so the word was sent back by phone to the superintendent, the Sheriff, the County Judge, to the officers at Temple and finally communicated to Price.

Thus the whole transaction, which involved the prisoner's liberty for thirty days, was transacted by phone messages. There he will have time to reflect that gum is dear at any price and liberty very sweet. This is the first case so far as known where a prisoner has been virtually telephoned into jail. And it was all done at the prisoner's request.

FREDERICK FOSTER LINCOLN

Clever Young Illustrator Is Ambirait Painter.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL New York, Nov. 12.-That fame may seek out merit and reward it even in these o-called sordid and selfish times has been proved by the good fortune that has be-fallen Fredereick Foster Lincoln, until recently a member of the art staff of a New York newspaper. Entirely on the strength of his newspaper work Mr. Lincoln, who is only 26 years old, has received and accepted an invitation from several wealthy patrons of art in this city to go abroad and take up a course of study in the best schools of Paris, to equip himself as a portrait painter, in which they believe he is destined to achieve distinction of the is destined to achieve distinction of the first rank.

It was not more than a year ago when Mr. Lineoin went to a newspaper office and asked for employment in the art department. He was a native of New York, but had been educated in the University of Pennsylvania, where he had taken a course in architecture. After being graduated he came back to this city and obtained employment as an architect. In the course of several years following the young man was in the service of some of the best-known men in that profession, but his interest and enthusiasm lay elsewhere.

In the intervals of his regular employment young Lincoln devoted himself to sketching portraits, more by way of diversion than for any serious purpose, but one day a specimen of his work fell under the eye of a trained artist, who advised him to follow that branch of art. It was then that Lincoln went to the Herald. He had had no study or training in drawing but the strength and power that lay in his pen, perhaps unknown to himself, were recognized and he was engaged.

He developed with extraordinary rapidity, and it was not long before the excellence and accuracy of his portraits and other drawings serving to illustrate news events of the day began to attract public attention not alone in New York, but throughout the entire country and Canada, and Cuba as well, where, through the efforts of a newspaper syndicate, his work was supplied to numerous enterprising papers.

the efforts of a newspaper syndicate, his work was supplied to numerous enterprising papers.

Among those who early noticed the promise of Mr. Lincoln's pen were the wealthy gentlemen who now propose to develop it to the full. They advised him to abandon newspaper work and proposed that they should send him abroad to complete his artistic education, all expenses to be borne by them. Mr. Lincoln was sensitive about accepting so generous an offer, and at first declined, but upon the assurance that the amount involved would be regarded merely as a loan, which his skill and ability could amply repay in the future, he was induced to accede.

It is the belief of expert judges of art that with the opportunity afforded Frederick Foster Lincoln's name will one day be as well known in portrait painting as that of Sargent is to-day.

WANTED MOURNING STAMPS.

Widow Sought to Have Black-Bordered Envelopes Matched.

New York, Nov. 12 .- "A dozen mourning stamps, please," said a beautiful young creature all done up in widow's weeds, to the clerk of the Imperial Hotel. "I wish them for my letters," she continued, dis-playing a bunch of missives, the oblong envelopes all having the neatest of nar-row black borders.

When told that Uncle Sam had thought-lessly not considered the correspondence of widows sufficient for a distinctive stamp, the beauty in black seemed disap-pointed.

"It can no more be strengthened by practice than the eyesight can be strengthened by practicing the eye on gazing at a distance. We know that the atmosphere at a certain temperature will hold just so much moisture and no more. So each memory will retain just so much, excepting that when one is physically ex-hausted the memory is weaker than when he is bright and feeling well. Our meth-

"We remember things only by reason of interesting to us, we remember it. As we learn how to concentrate our attention we remember a thing in proportion as our attention was concentrated on it at the moment of observing it or studying it. But concentration effected by will power does not last long and is not very effective. The concentration that rises from interest in the subject is the only kind that is effective. We tell children to 'pay attention'—that is, to concentrate. They don't even know what we mean; but interest them in that lesson, and they concentrate their attention on it without being a to of what they are doing.

Nine children out of ten will simply begin at the first line and try to memorize the thing, paragraph by paragraph, perhaps taking the most unimportant paragraph first. If, on the contrary, he were taught to read that lesson carefully through as a whole, first, and grasp the central fact in it, then take that fact as a starting point and group all the details under it in the order of their importance, the lesson would appear to his mind as a coherent, reasonable thing. He would remember it far more easily, lessons could be increased in length and time saved in the school course. In short, lessons should never be given out by paragraphs or pages or chapters, but by topics.
